International society of soil science.

Founded 1924. The society is the outgrowth of the international conferences of soil science (Conférence internationale de pédologie) held in Budapest, 1909; in Stockholm, 1910; in Prague, 1922; in Rome, 1924; at the last named conference the scope of the organization was enlarged, the society was founded, and the first world-wide congress was projected. It was decided at this time to apply the name "congress" to the meetings of the International society of soil science, and accordingly the first congress held under the auspices of the society (in Washington, D. C., 1927) bears the name "International congress of soil science".

- International union for the scientific investigation of population problems.
Founded 1928, as a result of the World population conference held in Geneva, 1927. Headquarters, London; editorial office, Baltimore, Md.
The meetings are triennial: the 1st general assembly was held in Paris, July 4-6, 1928; the second in London, June 15-18, 1931; the latter assembly is not to be confused with the first International congress for studies regarding population, held in Rome, September 7-10, 1931. The assemblies of the union are official meetings of that body, not open to the public, and are not international congresses
